“ I have a million memories of my father, Clayton. Trips to the beach, camping, fishing, swimming, horseback riding, concerts, birthdays, Christmas...but my fondest memories are Friday nights from my childhood when dad would go get our favorite Chinese food and we would all watch the X-files together. Those quiet nights at home with my family were my favorite. You were always there for me daddy, thank you. I love you and I miss you so much.

“ I first met Clayton when he and Carol were riding in Evansburg State Park. I was working hard to manage my young, antsy mare on the trail when I came upon the two of them enjoying a quiet outing with Marshall and Batman. Clayton must have been amused watching my efforts to control my horse, but he was kind and never made fun or said anything critical. From the first time I met him, I saw Clayton was friendly, open and curious. I ran into him and Carol in Evansburg a few more times after my mare had finally settled enough that I could stop and chat with them a bit. That led to Clayton and me arranging to meet at other times and ride together in the park (which I was limited to since I didn't have a trailer.) I came to learn Clayton was funny and kind and gentle in his own way. As time went on he would load his horse and trailer on down to Skippack to pick up me and my horse and off we'd go to Blue Marsh, Green Lane or some other park. After I gave up my horse he sometimes invited me to ride his and off we'd go again. They were great days. Clayton was clearly in his element. In the truck and on the trail he'd talk - about music (especially the blues he loved), nature, family, the work he used to do - the good, the bad and the ugly of things. He was always easy to talk with. It didn't matter that we had different backgrounds or held some different views on things - like I said, to me Clayton was open and curious and thoughtful. And patient, at least with me. Here I was, a city kid, with an interest in horses though little real skill or knowledge and Clayton couldn't have been a better guy, one who never made me feel stupid about the things I didn't know or had no experience with. I will hold on to the memory of those days and will think of Clayton, sometimes as I sit in my backyard in front of a fire listening to some blues he introduced me to. Thanks, Clayton and Godspeed.

“ The story of our lives could not be written without a chapter dedicated to Carol and Clayton. We spent many memorable hours with the two of them, fishing (remember when Clayton accidentally threw his folding shovel into the river while clearing a spot for us on the banks of the Schuylkill? We’ll always know where that shovel is); camping at French creek, (drawn by the smell of an apparently spoiled turkey we brought along to roast, a bear showed up, smashed our cooler, and peed on one of the cars); canoing the Delaware (after a day of capsizing, we camped on the river at dusk and woke to find we had slept next to a dead deer). We spent many hours in “the tin can”, watching cheesy horror videos, playing Pigmania and Crossfire; cooking another troublesome turkey and blowing up the oven door, helping put up new drywall and paper in a room for the Reese’s firstborn, Kim. I think we may have found what was at the time “the cheapest cheese hoagie” at the Limerick Deli. The Deli isn’t there anymore, but neither are a lot of good things. How far we have all come since those happy, carefree days. So many more stories to tell. So glad that the good memories will always remain.

Clayton goes to his eternal rest in the heart of his loving wife, children, grandchildren, and extended family and friends. Always dapper, always quick with a clever remark, always a cowboy. Happy trails.

Very nice tribute. Some fun memories. I have to say that I was really grateful to Clayton and Carol for letting me recuperate at their house for the few weeks following my heart surgery. It was very restful and they got me eating again. Some great meals. It was fun. Thanks guys. Say hello to everybody Clayton.
