“ I'm truly sorry for your loss. I worked for about 5 years with Duane at SEI. He was always very professional. We spent a lot of time on conference calls with banks. I still miss his smile and good morning and jokes in the break rooms in here. I have a fun memory to share, I tried coloring my hair myself and L'Oreal had some unique colors. I was attending a wedding and my hair came out a reddish/purple! My son, about 7 at the time, said, Mom, why is your hair purple?!? Then when I was grabbing coffee, Duane came in and said, hey, just want to let you know my wife is a great hairdresser if you need any assistance. I said, thanks and we had a good laugh. I hope you keep all of the wonderful memories close to your heart. I have faith he is watching and not far away.

Peace and strength to all,

Wendy

“ I am so sad to hear of Duane's passing. I lived across the street from Duane for years and was best man in his wedding. Even when I moved to Florida in 1993 we maintained a great friendship and on many occasions he would visit as I would him. When Duane and I hung out we laughed constantly but it was all in good fun. He envied my years growing up and I at times envied his. He loved his children and only wanted the best for them. I believe he was a great dad who superseded all expectations which was commendable. He will be missed since great friends are hard to find and looked forward to connecting again now that his children are getting older. All the best my friend. I wish you well My condolences to his children Sincerely Christopher damiani

“ Duane gave me some of the greatest advice that I incorporate with my own children today. We used to work together and I didn't have kids at the time. We were talking about families. I made the comment that when I have kids I want to give them the things I never had (at the time Duane already had his 4 children). Duane pressed me (as Duane liked to press buttons) Duane was like me too but what do you mean. I said “ I want to give them Nikes, and cool toys (all the trivial materialistic things)”. Duane kind of sits back (knowing he was going to make a point) and says I just want to give my kids time. I was like “what” Duane said “yeah time”. I was like “what do you mean”. Duane said I want my kids to come to me for everything, homework, sports, questions about life, friends. I want to always give them my time. I sat back and thought about it and I was like wow I never had the Nikes and the cool toys but most importantly I didn't have the father that invested the time I needed. I will NEVER forget that conversation and 10 plus years later and 2 children of my own that is what I always try to give my children essentially it comes to me giving my children me. I hope this makes sense. Thanks Duane for the advice. God Bless Duane's family as they grieve his loss.

*Andrew,
I don't know you at all, but I want to thank you so much for this story about my dad. I can picture him sitting there doing exactly what you described. I knew he always felt that way about his kids, but actually reading his words and seeing the way he had an impact on people is so moving. I'm crying as I read this because I'm sad, but also because I'm happy. He was a smart man, thank you very much for sharing <3*

This is truly such a beautiful tribute to my Dad. It would bring even a person who didn't know him to tears. Thank you so much for taking such care in putting this together. <3

“Daddy and I spent a lot of time alone together when I was growing up. His life was his kids, and he made sure he did everything he possibly could for them. Even when they didn't want to go to the baseball field after dinner to get some pitching practice in. ;) As much as I would fight him on it, I could never give up those days. He'd tell me to "bring the ole pepper" or try bribing me with Dairy Queen if I could get these next three strikes in a row. Too many times I would end up nailing him in the shins, but that never stopped him from setting up for the next one. All he ever wanted for his kids is to give them the life he never had, and to help them become the best they could be. All I can ever hope for in this life, is that I could become half the person my dad was. I know he is finally at peace and will continue to guide me in this life, until we meet again. I love you so much daddy. I will miss you every day. <3
