“ God, there are so many. I knew George since I was a kid. I have so many memories, fishing, floating down the river with a cooler in toe. Him saying watch for logs lol. I cant even fathom this. We spoke often, he was family. The bird man as he was fondly known as. I remember he picked me up in his white valiant and smoked tires all the way down first Avenue when I was a kid. I've never known such a soul as him. He was loud, he was funny, he gave no shits, but lived and loved with his whole being. We had many late nights at the river park talking about life and memories. He loved his watches his trains his family and friends. The world is just a bit more colder now. We have a fantastic angle by our sides now. With love to his family, know he was loved, by so many. He was ONE OF A KIND

She stopped chasing approval and started standing in her God-given identity. She stopped trying to be liked, and started living like she's already loved. That's when everything changed.
