“ "Mr. Victor" was my son's daycare teacher. He was a friend to our family as well. When I dropped off Luke in the mornings I would always have a deep, interesting conversation partner in Victor. I will miss him, and always remember him with respect.

“ A tribute to my dear friend Vivek Hivale

A journey through time: By Ron Benjamin

Losing Vivek feels like having a page torn from the book of my life. A chapter that was filled with laughter, shared memories from our alma mater -Christ Church, HS, unforgettable adventures, and a bond that transcended mere friendship.

After leaving India, I first met Vivek in the US while I was at Merck in 1995, and he was with Rosenbluth travel agency managing my Research & Development account. On the surface, we seemed like an unlikely pair – me, an outgoing person immersed in Drug Research, and Vivek, a quiet, friendly, shy & emotional person, immersed in the world of travel. Yet, as time unraveled, it was evident that our differences were the glue that held us together.

But our bond wasn't just about old friendship, it was about the quiet moments too. Those late-night conversations when the world was asleep, and it was just the two of us, pondering life's mysteries, sharing our dreams, fears, and hopes about our kids' futures. It was during these moments that I truly got to know the depth of Vivek's soul. Beneath the vibrant exterior was a compassionate heart, an introspective mind, and a spirit that sought to make a difference in the world. He really adored and loved his kids and the family.

Over the years, life took us in different directions. Careers, families, and responsibilities meant we couldn't spend as much time together as we once did. Yet, the bond remained unaltered. A simple text, a brief call, or an unexpected visit was enough to bridge the gap of time and distance.

Vivek's sudden departure has left a void, a silence that is deafening. But in the midst of this grief, I choose to focus on the legacy left behind. A legacy of joy, of embracing each day as a gift, and of treasuring the bonds we formed.

In Vivek, I didn't just find a friend, I found a confidante, a sounding board, a beacon of light in my darkest moments. Today, as we mourn the physical absence, let us also celebrate the spirit that continues to live on in our memories. I grieve for the bond we shared and the bonds we didn't get a chance to form yet, since he left his earthly home way too soon. Vivek was a beautiful soul who's left a trail of memories.

They say there are special people in our lives that never leave, even after they're gone and he was one of them.

Goodbye, dear friend. Our paths will cross again. Until then, I carry you in my heart, cherishing every moment we shared during our school days and again as professionals. How lucky am I to have someone like you as a friend who makes saying goodbye so hard!

“ Vivek uncle was a wonderful husband and a extremely great father to both his children... He loved his family and all his near and dear ones to the core. The void which he has left can never be filled.

I meet him when I was little when he had come to India to visit with mini masi and kids we had a such a great time, he would make us laugh, took us out. All those memories we will always cherish

Main god give Mini Masi, Kunal, Kavita and of course Charlie the strength in this difficult time of their life to handle the loss of a husband and father.

May his soul rest in peace

Vivek was a friend of mine. I often talked to him when at the YMCA in Phoenixville. I have moved from Phoenixville about 1 year ago and was shocked when I saw this obituary. My sincere condolences and prayers are with his family.
